Continuing Legal Education (CLE) opportunities

Ongoing lawyer training is key to staying competitive, but you also need to earn CLE credits. By attending legal conferences that offer CLE credits, you can work towards meeting CLE requirements while learning from the conference and upgrading your skills.

Networking and building professional relationships

Establishing good relationships with other legal practitioners is important to furthering any lawyer's professional career. Legal conferences bring together like-minded professionals and are one of the best, most natural places for attorney networking.

Marketing and promotion

Effective law firm marketing is essential for success, and legal conferences are excellent sources for learning the latest strategies for promoting your practice. Legal conferences are also great for connecting with vendors, other attorneys, and potential clients.

Who should attend a legal conference?

It's simple: Any legal professional who works at a law firm can benefit from attending a legal conference. Here's why:

Firm leaders who stay ahead of the curve with useful tools are better equipped to help drive innovation and growth at their firms.

Paralegals

While paralegals are not lawyers, they take on substantive legal work on behalf of lawyers. It is just as important for paralegals to stay updated on the latest trends and opportunities in the legal industry. Moreover, paralegals can use the knowledge gained from legal conferences to drive change and innovation at law firms.

Law firm administrators

Part of a law firm administrator's responsibilities involves managing workflows, processes, and implementing new technology. Therefore, they need to stay up to date on the latest in law firm productivity and tech.
